WHAT MILADY WEARS

With the summer vacation not far off, the little debutantes-to-be assume first importance, for it is becoming quite the thing for mothers to "bring them out" unofficially at the summer watering places. Miss Gertrude Pancoast, who will be presented by her parents in the autumn, appeared recently in a stunning khaki-colored suit cut on simple girlish lines. The coat, which was belted, was set off by a rolling collar of white handstitched linen. Miss Pancoast's hat was a wide-brimmed sailor of taffeta in a shade matching the suit and trimmed solely with two brown glans on each side.

With a smart tallleur of king's blue cloth Miss Katharine R. Hunter wears a low flat sailor hat of blue and black straw. One of the season's debutantes, Miss Isabel Wurtz Page, is wearing a girlish and becoming trottur of white serge. The skirt is quite plain with a slight flare, and the boyish coat is belted and has pockets both above and below the belt. Miss Page wears a small tricorn hat of black hemp with a white wing at the side.

An attractive and modish afternoon gown of smoke-gray chiffon over a foundation of soft silk is being worn by Miss Josephine C. S. Foster. The skirt is formed of a series of graduated flounces, each flounce being finished off with a band of black velvet. Straps of black velvet extend over each shoulder and also form the girde. A close-fitting hat of carise hemp completes the costume.
